

Welcome to your personal vault, Fonzi.

First of all, well done. You managed to find your way here.

That should not come as a surprise, of course. The employees selected by our organization are not exactly known for being ordinary. Exceptional intelligence, sharp instincts, and an inconvenient tendency to notice things that others overlook are among the qualities we look for.

So perhaps a little hidden information was never going to keep you out for long.

This vault serves as your designated repository for everything related to your assignments, operations, and employee records.

Within this vault, you will find subject files containing profiles and intelligence collected for assigned operations, as well as personal missions prepared specifically for you. Your own personnel file is also stored within the vault, containing information relevant to your identity, status, capabilities, and operational profile.

As an employee, you are also expected to maintain this vault by uploading and archiving your mission reports, operational records, and other relevant documents upon completion of an assignment. Consider it both a record of your work and a record of what you have managed to survive.

For easier navigation, all official files and records are stored under DOCUMENT, while active and completed assignments can be accessed through MISSION.

You are encouraged to explore the vault independently. Some information is meant to be discovered rather than explained. Review your files, inspect your clearance access, and familiarize yourself with the system. After all, a competent employee should know where their own records are kept.

If you require technical support, clarification, or direct contact with your designated support personnel, please reach out via email.

Your assignments are waiting.

Stay sharp. Stay useful. Stay alive.

— Vault Administration

P.S. Once you have familiarized yourself with the vault and figured out how everything works, your next recommended course of action is simple: contact your designated support personnel. They have been expecting you.
